Apple Pie

One of the best things about Autumn
Is my mother's apple pie with custard.
Those soft chunks inside a golden shell, smothered in a thick yellow shawl.
An old English apple pie she called it.

I helped to make the pastry,
Squidging the butter between my finger tips as I rubbed it into the soft flour,
Make a well in the middle for the waterfall of water,
Squelch, oozing through my fingers, have to make a ball,
Is it all stuck together?
Spread a carpet of flour on the worktop and tip it out, splat!
Scrape, scrape goes the back of the knife down my hands, taking off the dough.

Roll, push, stretch and pull until the pastry is big enough to hide the dish.

Summer was, and still is, full of raspberries

Summer pudding, raspberry pavlova

They are little pink friends dancing in the smooth white, whipped cream

Dreamy creamy

Talking of which have you ever had a Victoria sponge stuffed with fresh raspberries

And whipped cream – corrrr – it's sublime, heaven in a mouthful!

Vanilla, bouncy sponge with fruity cream and dusty sugar

Sensational

I loved going raspberry picking with mum and granny
Those little pink friends of sweet juice
Punnets overloaded, one for me, one for you,
Soft, seedy and fragrant
Delicious mmmmmmmm
Until I had eaten so many my tummy started to splutter
And moan

Oh mum I can't eat anymore!

When we got them home they were tipped into a big, grey metal bucket
What a shame
But then mum worked her magic
And out came the stickiest, fruitiest, raspberriest jam I'd go weak at the knees when it was smothered on fresh white bread
